

In the past few months 2 very important things have happened in Australia concerning disability services. You may have heard about them on the news.

The first big thing is the Disability Royal Commission finished their work and wrote a big final report for the government.

They listened to the stories of people with disabilities and their families to make 222 recommendations about how to improve life for people with disabilities.

The government is now listening to what other people think of the final report.

It will then let us know if there will be any changes to the way Kurrajong provides support to you.

The second big thing is the NDIS Review is complete.

In 2022 Minister Bill Shorten started a review of the NDIS to see what is working and what is not working.

Many people with disability and their families had their say – good and bad.

The review is now finished and the government is looking at the results.

We hope to hear about some improvement plans for the future soon, but Minister Shorten said there won't be changes in your services for some time.

Kurrajong will let you know when any changes happen.
